

Journalism Awards of Excellence on Coverage of Emergency Medicine Issues

The American College of Emergency Physicians (ACEP) recognizes significant contributions made by members of the news media to cover emergency medicine issues and to educate the public about them. ACEP invites submissions on key issues in emergency medicine in the categories of television (national), television (local), television (cable), newspaper, radio, Internet-based news sites and magazine.

ELIGIBILITY

The Awards of Excellence program is open to all credentialed journalists. There are no entry fees. Candidates can self-nominate or be nominated by someone else. ACEP members and chapters are also invited to submit nominations for stories they have seen in their media market.

Nominations must be for news stories published or aired within the 2017 calendar year. ACEP is unable to consider submissions created, produced or developed by ACEP Public Relations Committee members. ACEP is able to consider projects that might feature comments, or a profile, or guest appearances made by a Public Relations Committee member as long, as that member has no potential to receive a journalism award for the submission.

SELECTION

Entries will be judged based on the below criteria by members of ACEP's Public Relations Committee and approved by ACEP's national president.

CRITERIA

Award will be given to print and broadcast news stories that provide:

- ◆ Outstanding coverage of an emergency medicine issue.
- ◆ In-depth analysis or investigation that brings clarity to a key emergency medicine issue and educates the public.
- ◆ Significant impact that motivates positive change or breaks a new story that generates widespread coverage.

AWARDS

In 2019, only ONE award will be given across all categories. Applications will be accepted for any media category and all entries are judged equally.
