

MONDAY, AUGUST 3, 2020 – 2 PM WEATHER FORECAST

So far we've had a great day of weather to begin the Championship thanks to a slightly drier air mass that worked its way into central Maryland ahead of several waves of wet weather. The initial chance for showers and storms will begin before 5 PM and continue into early this evening. This evening's more active radar could have some strong to maybe even severe level storminess racing northward from Virginia towards Woodmont. The main event from Tropical Storm Isaias holds off until overnight into Tuesday morning. Looking at Tuesday, the vast majority of the rain from the storm is likely to fall between 8 AM and 2 PM with the heaviest rain with some wind gusts pushing 30 mph possible along with a slim risk of thunder. Rainfall totals have the potential to exceed 2", but will depend high on the final track of the center of Isaias. Expect rapidly improving conditions later Tuesday into Wednesday. For Wednesday and each day through the end of the week, the heat and a more classic summer pattern take over, with a slight chance for showers and t-storms each afternoon / evening.
