Beyond the obvious, with higher gasoline prices and higher jet fuel impacting airfares. Anything. We're freight is an important component of costs will matter with higher diesel prices that will be impactful. Furniture, for example, outside of energy, chemicals and metals are two other areas. Fortunately for most chemical pricing, whatever the chemical piece is, it tends to be small and whatever the end product cost is.

One exception to that is paints. Paint prices will be up this summer. And then for metals, aluminum in particular prices have increased a lot. So unfortunately for your summer barbecue, when you get your 24 pack of coke or beer, that is going to be a little bit more expensive than it otherwise would have been.
