

MONDAY, JUNE 12, 2017 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Yesterday's high wind gust was 23 mph and today we may struggle to reach 20 mph since the strongest winds today are forecast for this morning as the wind overall is expected to gradually decrease throughout the day. There are some showers and a couple of storms on radar early this morning across Wisconsin, however most of the action is weakening as it heads in our direction. Therefore we'll have a 40% chance of a shower/sprinkle and 20% chance of a storm early this morning, but look for showers and storms to fire up this afternoon along a boundary currently over the middle of the state. While the activity on radar will be developing between 1 – 4 PM this afternoon, the hope is that we won't have to contend with showers and storms at Erin Hills until after 4 PM. That boundary will sink right over our area tonight as more showers and storms appear even more likely overnight. Look for a similar forecast again on Tuesday with the best chance for wet weather early and late, then this boundary will become a warm front and lift away from us by early Wednesday allowing the cold front to sweep through all of Wisconsin Wednesday afternoon/night.
