

FRIDAY, JULY 14, 2017 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

We were very lucky late Thursday as .33 to .50" inches of rain fell around Bedminster with 1 to 3" of rain falling just some 30 miles to our south across the Princeton, Trenton and Philadelphia areas. Round two of this entire system slides across PA/NJ this morning with on and off showers and a 20% chance of some random rumbles. Hopefully we'll find some more breaks in the action as we head into the middle part of the day with round three arriving more so later today and into tonight. Clouds are expected to hang on a good portion of today and with easterly flow at the surface, temps will spend most of the day in the upper 60s and lower 70s with a brief high in the mid 70s possible this afternoon. Assuming the third and final piece to this system keeps it's severe storms to our south again later today and tonight, we may have to not only the last few raindrops to contend with early Saturday, but also the possibility of some fog at times from dusk to dawn tonight. Then we can look forward to improving conditions this weekend.
