

SATURDAY, AUGUST 26, 2017 – 6:15 AM WEATHER FORECAST

We picked up 1.18" of rain during the overnight. Low-level moisture continues streaming into the northern Great Plains from the south and also from the west, but it looks like it will be moving a little faster by this afternoon. Nevertheless, look for continued occasional showers and a few embedded thunderstorms through the morning hours. By early afternoon, there is a slightly higher chance for thunderstorms. Although we could still get heavy rainfall, we could also just see a few more tenths of additional rainfall to end up just over 1.50" of total rainfall from this system. I'll still have to watch this system closely. Temperatures are not the problem with highs between 68 and 73, and lows between 59 and 61 degrees the next few days. Most of next week will be warmer with mostly sunny skies. Winds will be mainly from the southeast 7 to 14 mph today but with gusts to 18 mph (higher gusts possible with storms). A north to northwest wind expected Sunday.
