MONDAY, MAY 13, 2019 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

We received only a few hundredths of rain in the past 24 hours bringing the weekend total to around 0.75" mostly coming Saturday evening. While the majority of the storminess is east and moving away, the upper level energy driving this system will swing through North Carolina today. This means we'll still have a possibility of seeing a pop up shower (40%) or storm (20%) through early this afternoon while dewpoints are still in the 60s. As the afternoon progresses, drier air will be ushered in on occasionally breezy west and northwesterly flow pushing dewpoints down through the 50s when we hit our high near 80. Skies will also be clearing by later today and with clear skies tonight lows will drop close to 50. Tuesday and Wednesday look beautiful, then we'll warm back up for the Championship.
