WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 2019 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

High pressure sliding across the Carolinas this morning is giving us a clear, calm and chilly start below 50 degrees, but fortunately sunshine this morning will warm us up a little more today. Highs this afternoon will top out in the mid 70s as clouds increase some from the west by later in the day. And today is the last super low humidity day with dewpoints in the 40s. Winds will be lighter today out of the north some by lunchtime and then more westerly later on staying below 10 mph. There is a weak disturbance in Illinois early this morning that may provide some radar echoes out to our west later today, however we'll only have a 20% chance of a raindrop due to the dry air in place. The extra cloud cover this evening and through the first half of the night will help keep lows in the mid 50s tonight. Then dewpoints will rise through the 50s towards 60 degrees on Thursday as highs get back closer to average in the lower 80s. There will also be a tad more wind on Thursday from the west and southwest, but as the afternoon clouds build all the models are keeping us dry with just a 20% chance of a shower or storm. More heat and humidity is expected Friday into the weekend with that continued 20% threat mainly each afternoon and evening.
