THURSDAY, MAY 16, 2019 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Temperatures are starting off not as chilly this morning already in the mid to high 50s with mostly clear to partly cloudy skies at times anticipated over the next few hours. Mostly sunny skies will become the main story as the morning wears on warming us up nicely with highs this afternoon peaking in the lower half of the 80s. Dewpoints today will be comfortable, but not as low as the last two days as they climb into the 50s. Some clouds will try to build this afternoon to mix with our sunshine, but overall it should wind up being a mostly sunny to partly sunny at times kind of afternoon. Light winds to start this morning will be a little more noticeable by this afternoon out of the southwest at 6-12 mph with maybe a couple gusts up around 15 mph. Tonight is expected to be another quiet night with lows in the low 60s, however a disturbance across the Ohio Valley tonight should fall apart at it heads towards Virginia and maybe North Carolina Friday morning. Therefore we'll call it partly sunny on Friday with right now just a 20% chance of a shower or storm from late morning on. The big change begins Friday afternoon when dewpoints reach the 60s and highs top out near 90. Look for somewhat similar weather to continue into this weekend.
