U.S. SENIOR WOMEN'S OPEN PINE NEEDLES 2ND

USGA

SATURDAY, MAY 18, 2019 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Drink plenty of water and hit the shade when possible today as near record temps are forecast to max out in the mid 90s this afternoon. Dewpoints in the mid 60s this morning will drop back into the lower 60s this afternoon. This drop in dewpoints this afternoon will spare us from having a heat index near 100, but rather it should be more in the mid to maybe high 90s. Sunshine this morning will mix with some clouds this afternoon. Light and variable winds pretty much all day will veer from the northwest eventually to the southeast later today and south by this evening as the coastal sea breeze pushes in our direction. This boundary as well as convection that will try to develop in the mountains will attempt to give us our 20% chance of a shower or storm from 3:30 PM through about midnight. Tonight will be a tad milder with lows lucky to make it to 70 degrees, then we'll reach the lower 90s on Sunday. The difference on Sunday is that it may feel almost as hot as today since dewpoints will be a notch higher spending more time in the mid 60s in the afternoon hours. The saving grace will hopefully be the increased air movement as winds are expected to be breezier on Sunday with a high gust of 20 mph not out of the question from the south.
