

MONDAY, JUNE 24, 2019 – 11 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Showers approaching from the southwest could pop up a shower or sprinkle around South Bend through lunchtime, but it is looking like 1:15 PM to about 4:15 PM is when our window is highest for rain today (60%) with an embedded storm possible (40%). Southwest winds will be gusty at times this afternoon with a lot of clouds and temps staying in the 70s. As we get closer to 5 PM and beyond, wider gaps in the clouds should open up and allow the sun to come out more - therefore destabilizing the atmosphere enough for more pop up showers and storms to develop and move in from the west, especially as we head towards 8 PM when a thin line on radar may move through. Clouds are forecast to clear out overnight tonight with breezy west/southwest winds ushering in slightly cooler and drier air. Temps are going to start off comfortably cool Tuesday morning and even though we may be in the low 60s, it may feel like the 50s when the wind gusts at times. Look for highs to be in the lower half of the 80s Tuesday afternoon with lots of morning sunshine mixing with increasing clouds later in the afternoon as another wave of action on radar near Chicago will need to be monitored in case it manages to get near South Bend Tuesday evening.
