

FRIDAY, JUNE 28, 2019 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

We lucked out last night as that band of showers and storms fell apart in northern Indiana giving us a 25 mph gust and some sprinkles after 10 PM. There exists still a chance of a rogue shower or storm (20%) at times this morning, but the overall theme is supposed to be that the activity to our northwest on radar will stay there and weaken by lunchtime. This means we'll have some clouds mixing with our sunshine this morning and then a period of mostly sunny skies should start out this afternoon when we reach towards 90 degrees or so. Dewpoints will be in the upper 60s so the heat index could get close to 95 degrees for a time this afternoon, but thankfully we are to have more wind during the afternoon hours coming from the southwest around 10 mph with some gusts between 15 and maybe even 20 mph. A 20% chance of a shower or storm pops back up after 2 PM and a 40% chance will develop after 5 PM as a boundary to our north sags down and gives us a 60% chance of showers and a 40% chance of storms tonight. We are not the center of the bullseye with tonight's action, but as we've seen so far this week, a few miles can make all the difference. A shower or storm could linger into Saturday morning, otherwise the new wrinkle for tomorrow could be more clouds and maybe not as hot.
