SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2019 – 6:45 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Warm and dry conditions will continue today, with increasing wind for the afternoon hours. Expect more in the way of high clouds to stream northward today, though with plenty of sunshine sending temperatures quickly through the 60s and 70s this morning to an afternoon high of 88, before clouds increase late in the afternoon. Light southerly winds this morning will become southwesterly around 6 mph before lunch time, then afternoon winds will be gustier at around 10 mph with a few gusts around or just past 20 mph from the southeast. Tonight will be partly cloudy and mild with a low in the upper 50s. Moisture from the Southwest will begin to increase as we begin next week, bringing more cloudiness and slightly cooler weather as highs Monday come down into the middle 80s, and Tuesday's high drops into the lower 80s. Spotty afternoon/evening showers and storms are expected to form in the mountains and there's a 20 percent chance they could drift into our area later each day/evening. Monday won't be too breezy, but winds will ramp up later Tuesday into the 10-15 mph range, with gusts around 25 possible. Wednesday will dry out a bit with sunshine and a high near 80, along with gusty afternoon winds. Then, expect a breezy day Thursday with a 20 percent chance for a p.m. shower/storm.
