

FRIDAY, JUNE 18, 2021 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

The marine layer came back in late yesterday before sunset a few hundred feet above Torrey Pines and thankfully it looks to have mostly stayed at that altitude overnight. The short term computer models suggest that it will lower some as we head past sunrise, so we will have to watch out for the threat of fog settling in, however it appears as though it will not be as bad as yesterday morning. As we exit the fog window early this morning after 8 AM, low clouds will gradually give way to sunshine mid and late morning with more sun than clouds early to mid afternoon. We'll likely see this marine layer break up a bit more offshore this afternoon, but like yesterday it may very well try to come back in with low clouds before sunset this evening. Light winds this morning will become a southwesterly breeze by lunchtime with a subtle turn towards the west this afternoon. Winds speeds today will be similar or slightly less than yesterday with highs once again near 70 degrees.
