

TUESDAY, JULY 13, 2021 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

This Tuesday certainly starts off a bit differently than the last two mornings in terms of reduced cloud cover, as a result, more early sunshine will mean an even faster rise in temperature today, quickly passing 90F after 11am and achieving a heat index value well over 100F throughout the afternoon hours. This along with a very high UV Index today means all participants on course should take care to both hydrate and replenish electrolytes frequently. On a brighter note, a more stable atmosphere today with Bermuda high pressure will mean a much reduced chance for thunderstorms this afternoon, however, some mid-level energy on Wednesday afternoon will once again bump up those scattered storm chances. Longer term, Thursday and Friday feature more hot sunny weather before a front approaching the area brings us a chance for showers and storms, and bit milder temps, on Saturday. Good luck out there today!
