

MONDAY, JULY 26, 2021 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

The showers and storms in the Hudson Valley last evening hit NYC pretty good overnight, but we managed to get clipped by our own shower with a few rumbles just before midnight with 0.23" of rain falling. No more rain is forecast for today as high clouds will mix with our sunshine at times through the first half of the day, then things clear out later on today. Temps and dewpoints starting off around 70 degrees will warm up into the upper 80s this afternoon while dewpoints will fall through the 60s this afternoon as the atmosphere dries out. Northwest winds this morning will battle with a slight onshore Sound breeze this afternoon with overall speeds mainly staying below 10 mph. Tonight lows will be in the upper 60s under clear skies with a slight chance of a patch of fog and then we'll look for another hot day again on Tuesday with highs near 90 degrees. Dewpoints will be lower on Tuesday hanging closer to 60 degrees before another cold front approaches Tuesday night.
