

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14th, 2021 – 12 PM WEATHER FORECAST

After receiving an additional 0.61” inches at the clubhouse last night our rain issues will subside this afternoon through Sunday with the passage of the cold front that took place very early this morning. Clouds will begin breaking right around noon today and with that winds will start to pick up out of the north, blowing 4 to 8 mph gusting near 12 mph, under mostly sunny skies and temperatures back down around average for this time of year. Dewpoints will continue to drop overnight as the high pressure system slowly moves east over the southern Great Lakes shifting our winds on Sunday, first to the northeast, before settling out of the east before noon as temperatures once again as expected to remain in the upper 70s to low 80s Sunday afternoon.
