

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 2022 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Another muggy and mild start to the day with winds light and variable throughout much of the morning and afternoon. Temperatures sharply rise into the afternoon with the high fluttering in the upper half of the 90s. There will be a few fair weather clouds around later in the day providing much needed shade and relief from the heat index over 100 degrees at times. Look for that persistent 20% risk of a shower/storm this afternoon since the models are still hesitant to completely eliminate the minute chance for any raindrop to pop up later in day. Those fluffy afternoon clouds will fade as the evening wears on keeping things mild with overnight lows again near 70 degrees. The models agree on keeping the first half of Thursday dry, whereas the afternoon and evening hold a better chance for a shower/storm to develop out ahead of this approaching front. Winds will see a bump in speeds primarily out of the south and west Thursday before shifting Friday. A lingering shower could last across the area Friday morning, but the main focus will be for the shower/storm development during the afternoon closer to the coast.
