

THURSDAY, June 9th, 2022 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Just over an inch of rain fell between 11 PM and 4:30 AM this morning as thunderstorms worked their way through the area and are now working their way into New England signaling the end for any chance of showers or storms the rest of the day today lasting through the day on Friday. The combination of overnight clouds keeping temps in the 70s along with the inch of rain will have things feeling sticky this morning. Fortunately the movement of this frontal boundary is expected to pick up our winds to speeds similar to what we saw on Tuesday with averages in the mid teens gusting into the mid 20s at times starting first out of the SW shifting more W this afternoon ending back out of the NW this evening staying from that direction as they slow down to mirror conditions on Wednesday. Winds along with a plummeting dewpoint will act to dry us out this afternoon giving us clear skies overnight allowing lows to once again fall into the upper 50s Thursday night providing us with temps in the low 60s under mostly sunny skies to start play warming quickly into the 70s mid morning topping out in the upper 70s Friday afternoon.
