

SUNDAY, June 11th, 2022 – 7 AM WEATHER FORECAST

The four hours of drizzle lasting through the morning session lasted just long enough to produce 0.01” inches of rain at the clubhouse before things cleared out. This morning the first line of showers and storms dropped right at 0.30” inches over the 2 hour window with half of that coming in the last twenty minutes.. As we look to get going these showers and storms will continue to push to our east giving us a break in the action with temps starting out in the low 60s under mostly cloudy skies. Similar to the Foursomes session, winds will be light and variable with gusts then primarily from the south in the AM before ramping up with sustained winds averaging near 7 mph this afternoon gusting near 10 mph at times. Cloudy skies will limit daytime heating with temps struggling to get into the 70s before the final match ends. This afternoon through Sunday night is still expected to include the potential for strong showers and storms with heavy rains, lightning and the ability to produce damaging winds.
