

TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 2022 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

A nice start to the morning with temperatures in the low 60s with a few high clouds beginning to filter in from our west. The winds will stay out of the northwest and noticeably reduce our humidity as dewpoints hover in the low 50s. High pressure maintains control across the Boston area today, but look for some low clouds to develop early on Wednesday when our winds shift towards the north and east favoring an onshore flow. We look to stay dry through midweek as we gradually warm back up in the 80s Thursday into Friday ahead of this approaching cold front to our northwest. Winds shift back southwesterly and pick up a bit with gusts in the 20s at times as this weak front slips into the area. The chance for a shower becomes possible by Thursday night into Friday morning, with the risk of a shower/storm later in the day on Friday. For the weekend, we will see a decent drop in temperatures and humidity as this system stalls off to our northeast, promoting cooler northwesterly flow.
