

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 2022 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Clear and crisp conditions early this morning will evolve into a mix of clouds and sun as we heat into the mid 70s by lunchtime. There is a 20% chance of a shower and 40% risk of a sprinkle today, but all the activity on radar this morning to our west is forecast to weaken across New England. Look for south winds to increase throughout the day, with gusts ramping up past 20 mph this afternoon. The south wind has made a declaration to fight through the night, which will act to keep our temperatures up in the mid 60s. A ripple in the flow passes overhead around midnight tonight, with enough moisture to squeeze out a few raindrops in the overnight hours. Look for more humidity Friday morning along with more heat by early afternoon setting the stage for a potential line of showers with a few storms to race through Boston around or shortly after 2 PM. Once they pass, the winds shift to the west/northwest and usher in cooler, drier air for this weekend. The question at this point is how cold will we be for Saturday and Sunday as the latest model trends are suggesting well below average temps...we shall see.
