

SATURDAY, June 25th, 2022 – 5 AM WEATHER FORECAST

The patchy fog we are seeing in low lying areas around the course will burn off quickly this morning as the sun is able to warm us up quickly with no low level clouds overhead. Lots of sunshine awaits us the rest of the day Saturday as light winds will start to blow out of the southwest mid morning lasting into the early hours before starting to taper off once again overnight. Similar to yesterday, flow will remain primarily from the southwest with average speeds near 6 mph gusting to as high as 12 mph times. Temperatures Saturday and Sunday will be the highest we have seen all week as the high pressure over the region allows temperatures to climb into the upper 80s each afternoon while keeping the air dry during the day as dewpoints will hover in the low to mid 60s pushing our ET rates above the 0.20" both days. Clouds will start to fill in Sunday afternoon as the cold front looks to make its way across PA while showers and storms are still not expected to form until after sunset Sunday night lasting through the day on Monday.
