

THURSDAY, JULY 21st, 2022 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

A much needed 1.11" of rain fell late last night with the line of storms along the front. Thicker cloud cover should break up as the morning progresses as a north and west wind brings in slightly "cooler" and drier air. The high temperature still looks to nudge in the low 90s, but dew points should slowly drop into upper and mid 60s, which will provide much relief from yesterday with a heat index only in the mid 90s at times. Today, we will see more sun than clouds around before clearing out tonight into Friday with a low in the upper 60s. The heater turns back on Friday and into the weekend with our temperatures trending through the mid and upper 90s. Our Heat Index will be more of a factor for Saturday as the humidity slowly returns leading to feel like the low 100s again. Decent high pressure in place across much of our region will provide mainly dry conditions and return our flow back southerly leading into the final Championship Rounds.
