

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13th, 2022 – 9 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Strong onshore flow from our SW will continue to drive conditions across the southern Puget Sound on Saturday as the marine layer starts to burn off overhead temperatures will quickly start to warm up into the mid 60s for the start of the semis this morning and continuing into the mid 70s then as play finishes up this afternoon under mostly sunny skies. Winds will also remain primarily from the SW today shifting slightly more WSW this afternoon as temps have heated up the surface with speeds starting out averaging 4 mph gusting to near 10 mph increasing to 8 mph with the slight shift later on with gusts then climbing into the mid teens. Overnight tonight winds will drop off to light and variable once again allowing the marine layer to return for the finals Sunday with the rest of the day playing out very similar to today minus the winds, which are expected to remain fairly light and variable for the majority of the day on Sunday before finally picking up out of the NE late Sunday afternoon as the championship match finish up.
