

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20th, 2022 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Beautiful sunny skies to start the Round of 32 with some clouds filtering in the mix by about lunchtime. Our temperatures will warm up quickly through the first half of the day and will briefly knock our Heat Index in the oppressive category at times. With winds also relaxing into the early afternoon, the stillness could make things even more uncomfortable out there. The puffy white clouds will build back in mid-afternoon and help provide some shade, but foreshadows the increasing chance for a shower or storm developing later on. Our winds will dance around with a southerly component as the sea breeze pushes inland firing off storm activity along the western coast of Florida. These 40% chances increase to 60% around dinnertime with these pop-up cells likely forming together and potentially providing prolonged heavy rainfall to those caught underneath them. Any lingering storm activity after sunset will begin to weaken and become more isolated after midnight. The Florida pattern continues into midweek with another great start to the mornings, before the afternoon and evening rounds begin.
