

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24th, 2023 – 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

A few dinky sprinkles on radar dancing around our coast, otherwise we will look to shed these and our clouds later this morning. With dew points in the upper 50s and temperatures right around the mid to upper 60s, a light pullover might fit the bill for the first half of the day. However, you might want to take that pullover off around lunchtime as temperatures warm underneath the mostly sunny sky with a high near the low 80s. Winds will turn a bit more easterly for the remainder of the day and will be a bit more manageable than yesterday. Some high clouds paint the sky later this afternoon and evening and stick around overnight as we once again near the lower mid 60s. Other than a little more wind for Thursday afternoon, conditions look prime, but begin trending worse for Memorial Day weekend with another low pressure system sliding up the coast, bringing the next chance for modest precipitation and very strong winds.
