SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 2024 - 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Overnight clouds have generated a somewhat milder start this morning with temps only falling down to 60 degrees overnight expect to see conditions play out in a manner similar to Friday with heavier cloud cover in the early morning ahead of the sun breaking somewhat late this morning allowing temperatures this afternoon to once again find their way into the mid 70s. Winds, starting the day from the north/northwest, will begin to do a '180' just about noon, transitioning over to the south/southeast late this afternoon with speeds starting out light at 5 - 7 mph increasing slightly this afternoon up to 7 - 9 mph as the cold front approaches from our west. The position of the low offshore has allowed this boundary to speed up slightly, now expected to arrive just after sunset with showers then lasting through midnight before clearing as our dewpoints fall off a cliff, dropping down into the 40s just as the sun comes up generating a chilly start to the day on Sunday with lows near 50s struggling to warm into the 70s on Sunday as winds blow from the west/northwest at 10 - 12 mph gusting to near 20 mph tomorrow afternoon.
