THOR GUARD WEATHER

37TH U.S. WOMEN'S MID-AMATEUR · BRAE BURN

USGA

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2024 - 6 AM WEATHER FORECAST

Conditions for the first day of match play won't look all that dissimilar to Sunday on the surface; a cool start under clear skies will have temps warming into the upper 60s just before noon, topping out later today in mid 70s not long after the final match gets underway. Winds won't be as intense today as those low pressure systems drift further away from New England as the high then to our southwest takes over duties here at the course with flow now out of the west/southwest throughout the day. Speeds, starting out this morning light at 4 - 5 mph will increase as the surface heats up, averaging 7 - 9 mph this afternoon. Heavier cloud cover will start to fill the skies late this afternoon as showers moving into western MA fall apart on their approach into the metro, leaving us with the off chance for a drop or two to fall at the course overnight with no accumulation expected to occur. Tuesday has a second verse, same as the first vibe to it, albeit ever so slightly warmer even as winds become west/northwest at sunrise with temps in the mid 50s warming into the upper 60s in the morning topping out near 76 in the afternoon under mostly sunny skies.
