

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2026 – 2 PM WEATHER FORECAST

A mostly dry and pleasant weather pattern remains in place across the area this weekend as high pressure continues to build over western Oregon, with highs in the mid-60s before temperatures rebound into the upper 60s to low 70s Sunday under increasing sunshine. Monday looks a little cooler with more clouds and highs in the upper 60s, while winds remain generally light and variable. Tuesday brings the next opportunity for precipitation as a weak disturbance and associated frontal boundary move through, although rainfall amounts currently appear limited and widespread soaking rain is not expected. Winds should remain mostly light through the period, generally in the single digits, with some modest increases possible around Tuesday's disturbance. Wednesday should trend drier as the system departs, though considerable cloud cover may linger and temperatures will remain in the 60s. By Thursday, conditions should remain mostly dry with partial clearing and highs in the low 70s.
